Dear colleagues

It is with pleasure that we once again welcome you to the Educational Course of the Swiss Society for Neuroradiology, which was established a decade ago in Bern.

This year we have decided to cover some very important but unusual aspects of daily neuroradiology practice and have acquired the participation of an interesting faculty. The main session deals with incidental findings in neuroradiology and the relevance on daily practice. We all know too well that it is important not just to deal with the clinical symptom that the patient referred for an examination has but to also evaluate all that we can see on the images provided in order to help both the referring clinician and the patient in order to improve the outcome and to optimize management. We know that these « incidentalomas » can go from simple findings that may not even demand follow-up to possibly tumoral lesions where a more aggressive surgical approach is needed. These findings can involve any area that neuroradiologists and clinical neuroscientists may have to examine. Thus we have covered topics as widely varied as pineal cysts, cerebrospinal fluid leaks and meningiomas among others.

We hope that you will find this course as challenging and interesting as listeners as we found it to organize.
